The main article title is 'Gas below $3 per gallon at some stations in western Mass.' by David McKay, published on October 28, 2014. The article text discusses a drop in gas prices in Springfield, Massachusetts, from 3.69 to below 3.00 per gallon. It mentions that regular gasoline prices have dropped 65 cents since their peak in May and are now 29 cents lower than last year. Prices for diesel remain the same. Fernando Navarro of Springfield is quoted as saying, 'When I was driving I was paying 3.69 on the gallon and now its been at a steady three dollars. I'm more inclined to buy a vehicle now, whether its a newer vehicle that will drive for forty miles per gallon or something you know a little older.' F.L. Roberts president and CEO, Stephen Roberts, is quoted as saying demand for gasoline has decreased over the past decade. He offers 20 cents off the gallon to customers as a reward. A link is provided to find the lowest prices in the area. Social sharing options for Email, Print, Facebook, Twitter, Google+, LinkedIn, and More are available.
